ELO Digital Office at the CeBIT '11 in Hall 3, Stand F30:

Experience 'ELO ECM 2011' live at the CeBIT

Stuttgart, 25 January 2011 - On March 1-5 at the CeBIT, ELO Digital Office will be exhibiting the new '2011' versions of its enterprise-content-management (ECM) suites. With a newly designed user interface based upon the Microsoft ribbon technology, both ELOprofessional (the software for mid-sized companies) as well as ELOenterprise (the system for corporate clients) will be showcased at Stand F30 in Hall 3. An additional focus was a higher degree of integration in the Microsoft Office Suite. ELO has also integrated not only a form designer for workflows, but also the iSearch module as standard features. A top theme right now continues to be "mobility": In addition to the smartphone app for the Apple iPhone, ELO is now introducing its connectivity with the Apple iPad and RIM Blackberry. All who are interested are invited to see these new features demonstrated live at the stand.

More automation, more comfort, and more efficiency are all offered by ELO with the new "2011" versions. Thanks to the even better integration in the Microsoft Office Suite, users can utilize ECM functions directly within the application of their choice -- thoroughly in line with the ELO multi-client strategy. For example, users can navigate or search directly in the ECM archive from within the Outlook user interface. Microsoft Office users profit from an even more powerful and comfortable work environment from which they have quick and flexible access to all relevant ECM functions.

Lean processes are healthy processes

Frequently recurring procedures harbor a great degree of optimization potential for businesses. The new ELO workflow form designer releases this potential: With its assistance users are able to create customized procedures even more easily -- without the slightest need for time-consuming, additional programming. The new workflow components are included in the standard
